Tianjin's Former Foreign Concessions

下面的文章的文字和图片都要大一些

by Michael Hart (何迈可)

Of all of the cities in northern China, Tianjin has one of the largest collections of European style architecture dating from the late 1800s and the first half of the 1900s. This legacy is related to Tianjin as home to a number of foreign concessions and an important link between northern China and the outside world thanks to its river and sea port.

In what the Chinese refer to as the Century of Foreign Humiliation, between roughly 1842 and 1945, a number of foreign countries extracted territory across China in the form of "concessions" through a series of wars and treaties. These concessions allowed foreign countries to have small areas of land under their own jurisdiction which they then used as bases of operation for trade and missionary work. The first group of these treaty ports, for they were usually located near the coast or on a river, were granted after the First Opium War ending in 1842. In this first set of treaties six cities were opened including Hong Kong and Shanghai. A second round of hostilities in 1856-1860 deemed the Second Opium War, ended with another treaty opening up even more cities to foreign concessions and allowing for foreign diplomatic missions in Beijing. This second set of cities included Tianjin and Wuhan among others. In the ensuing years, further conflicts between China and other countries added even more foreign concessions and allowed even more countries to establish bases within China.

Tianjin is unique in that at various points of time, nine different countries had concessions in the city. These countries included Britain, France, the USA, Japan, Germany, Italy, the Austro-Hungarian Empire, Belgium and Russia. The American concession was very small and short lived. It was quickly absorbed into the British concession and so is often overlooked. Each of the other concessions spanned decades and advanced at different speeds and had different focuses. As countries respective relations with China changed, the concessions eventually reverted back to China. The end of World War Two helped to bring an end to the remaining concessions from a legal perspective, but many prominent buildings from the period remain to help tell the story.

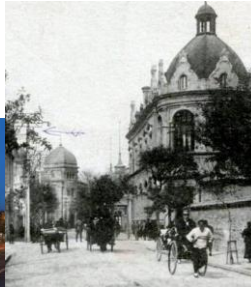

To get a feel for different parts of these former foreign concessions, below are listed some of the most well-known collections of older foreign-style buildings.

Banking Street (JieFang Road, Heping District)

Héping Qū Jiěfàng Lù

和平区解放路

A walk starting at the JieFang bridge, near Tianjin's main train station, and traveling southeast along Jiefang road will guide one past a series of former bank and company headquarters. These grand buildings are testament to how much trade flowed through Tianjin. Today many of the former bank buildings are still in use as banks, but now in the hands of the largest Chinese state banks. This street travels first along what was the heart of the French concession before reaching the earliest part of the British concession. The Astor hotel is located in the latter. The hotel, besides having portions of its interior restored to look like it did in the late 1800s, also has a museum in the basement which is worth a look. Photos and exhibits help showcase some of the prominent people who passed through Tianjin, Chinese and foreign alike.

Heping Road and Binjiang Avenue, Heping District

Héping Qū Héping Lù yǔ Bīnjiāng Dào

和平区和平路与滨江道

Right in the heart of Tianjin's pedestrianized shopping area, the intersection of Heping Road and Binjiang Avenue is surrounded by European style buildings. Most locals know the tall department store building Quanyechang (劝业场). It was built in 1928 and was a premier shopping destination for years, but these days its exterior is grander than its interior. At this same intersection, Starbucks opened a Reserve location in what was formerly the National Commercial Bank Building. One can enjoy a cup of coffee nestled up against old bank counters and enjoy the grand decoration of a bank from a century ago. In both directions along both Binjiang Avenue and Heping Road, former concession era buildings can still be found.

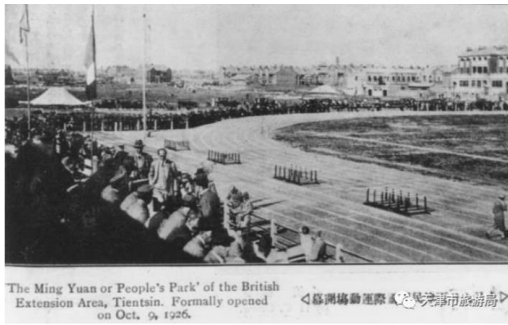

Five Roads Area, Heping District

Hépíng Qū Wǔdàdào

和平区五大道

This section of the former British concession was developed largely in the 1920s and 1930s to host the growing population of the city. It gets its name from the five long roads beginning in the southwest and running to the northeast creating a solid block of European style buildings which remain reasonably well preserved. These roads and confusingly there are six, are Chengdu Avenue (成都道), Chongqing Avenue (重庆道), Changde Avenue (常德道), Dali Avenue (大理道), Munan Avenue (睦南道) and Machang Avenue (马场道). The Five Roads area hosts a variety of homes including everything from compact apartment buildings to large grand mansions. Today the area is popular thanks to its tree-lined streets, the low density and quiet neighborhoods. A number of restaurants, coffee shops and pubs have opened in the area, attracting visitors. The area around the reconstructed MinYuan stadium has a fair offer of eating establishments and is the starting point for horse draw carriages led by Chinese language tour guides. The area is popular in the evening as a place for exercise and people watching. The Tianjin Museum of Modern History is located in this area and can be accessed by appointment. It has displays showing the rich history of Tianjin during the concession period.

Former Italian Concession, Hebei District

Héběi Qū Yìshìfēngqíngjiē

河北区意式风情街

Although the Italian Concession was a relatively latecomer in terms of foreign concessions in Tianjin, its small size and compactness make it easy to take in. There are several streets and plazas with distinctly Italian architecture relatively well preserved. Today the area is often swarmed by hordes of local tourists because the concession was also home to several well-known Chinese writers and thinkers of the early to mid-1900s. This area has an abundance of restaurants and shops and thanks to its mostly pedestrianized streets makes it a great place to dine out during nice weather. The area is also home to a more modern building, the Tianjin City Planning Exhibition Hall, it is worth a look as it has models and maps of Tianjin's various districts including several that look back at Tianjin's origins.

Former Japanese Concession, Heping District

Héping Qū Rìzūjiè

和平区日租界

Located in Heping District, a number of buildings from the Japanese concession remain including Jing Yuan (静园) sometimes called “Garden of Serenity” and Zhang Yuan (张园). Each of these former residential buildings is open to the public with modest ticket prices. The last Chinese Emperor Puyi spent time in Tianjin after the end of the Qing dynasty and resided in both of these homes. The buildings are worth a visit and have photos onsite to help tell their unique story.

Others

Although very little remains of the former Russian, Austro-Hungarian and Belgian concessions, the other concessions are worth exploring on foot. With several thousand buildings still preserved from this period, a trip through many parts of central Tianjin will bring visitors face to face with building styles that seem out of place in a Chinese city. They do however help tell part of the story of Tianjin as an international port city in an era dominated by the sea trade and slower rail trips linking the city to Beijing and other parts of China.

Guided walking tours can also be arranged for small groups which can help bring these old buildings to life with stories of their past.

Tianjin and the Foreign Concessions

by Christopher Boobier (博一夫)

Tianjin is not a stranger to the formation of international communities within her territory. Being ideally placed at the intersection between the Hai He River and the Grand Canal, Tianjin has for a long time been recognised as one of China's most significant trading ports with Beijing and North China.

Following the Peking Convention of 1860, extraterritoriality was granted to both Britain and France, who proceeded to establish their own concession areas. At the turn of the 20th century, Japan, Germany, Russia, Austria-Hungary, Italy and Belgium began to establish their own concession areas, resulting in the majority of the riverfront area of downtown Tianjin being subject to foreign control. This occupation saw the construction of schools, hospitals, transport links, water towers, prisons and barracks, and remained occupied by the foreign merchant and diplomatic population of Tianjin until the outbreak of World War Two. Having survived invasions and earthquakes, these concession areas still stand firm today, offering a fascinating insight into Tianjin's recent past when foreign occupation took a very different form.

Five Boulevards area (Wu Da Dao)

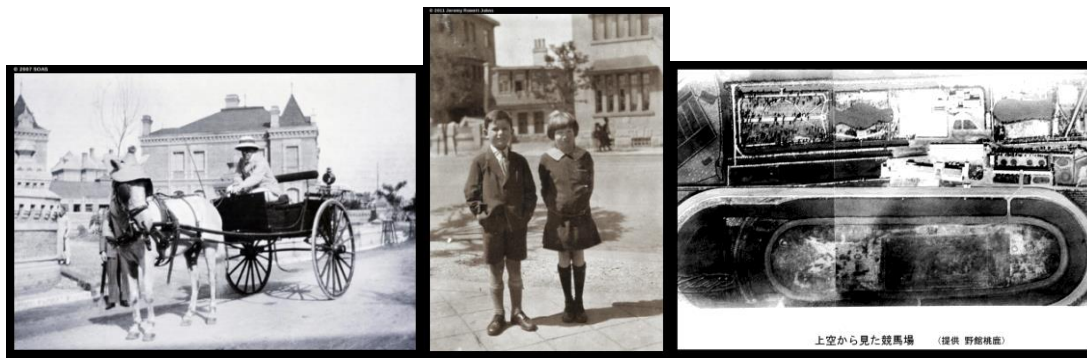

Wǔdàdàodào

五大道

Located in Heping District, the “Five Avenues” (Wudadao) area represents the former British Concession. The five roads – consisting of Chengdu Dao (成都道), Machang Dao (马场道), Chongqing Dao (重庆道), Munan Dao (睦南道) and Dali Dao (大理道), shape the area which contains a vast array of European architectures and gardens, covering around 1.28 square kilometres.

Former residents have included former Olympic Champion Eric Liddell – a Scotsman who was born in Tianjin in 1902, and was later remembered in the 1981 Oscar-winning film Chariots of Fire, along with a large number of Chinese celebrities.

This area is protected by local authorities, and therefore any revitalization or redevelopment of any properties is performed under strict regulation. A wonderful area for strolling on a Sunday afternoon, Wudadao is increasingly full of modern residences, cool bars, hideaway cafes and up-market restaurants. Horse carriages and bicycle rent are available.

Originally formed in 1901, the former Italian Concession area remains relatively intact and increasingly a hub for European culture and Italian cultural events. Formerly intended as a garrison for Italian troops, the area is now a vibrant location for dining and drinks, and has become a major tourist location for visitors from all across China.

An old map of the former Italian Concession, seen on the banks of the Hai He River.

Marco Polo Square, located in the former Italian Concession, is now home to a foreign language cinema. At the time of writing, this cinema complex is showing an Italian Film Festival containing some of the most widely celebrated classics of Italian motion picture history.

Other Foreign Concessions

The area of Jiefang Lu (解放路) (previously known as Victoria Road), which housed the many custom and diplomatic offices, as well as Victoria Park. A trip to the Astor Hotel or indeed the Ritz Carlton, followed by a walk along Jiefang Lu towards the river allows you to revisit a world of customs officials, elegant ballrooms and regal architecture.

All Saints Church of Tientsin

by Hao Boya (郝博雅)

The "All Saints Church of Tientsin" was a parish church located on the corner of former Racecourse Road and former Meadows Road in the heart of the former British concession. In 1893, the British Municipal Council granted this site to the North China Mission of the Church of England to thank them for their services. However, it took the church commission almost 7 years to gather all the necessary funding to fill up the pond (the site used to be a pond) and the construction of the church building. On the 3rd of June 1900, the foundation stone was laid by Bishop. Charles Perry Scott and Rev. Francis Lushington Norris. The building took approximately 3 years to complete.

The original church (1900-1935) was designed by Arthur Christopher Moule (who later became a professor for Sinology at Cambridge). The original church only had one main entrance which faced Meadows Road (now Tai'an Road), the north façade had 5 lancet windows at equal height and on the pediment, stood a large rose window. The original church had cascading angled buttresses at its east façade, at the time was no entrance on this side of the building.

In the afternoon of 18th May 1935, a fire started from the belfry possibly due to the use of a blow torch for maintenance work. Noticed by the Chinese caretaker who alerted the fire brigade and those in the church awaiting the christening of baby Hughes. Problems with the water pressure of the fire hoses and then a breeze which fanned the flames, led to the entire roof catching alight. The roof timbers were soon burning, and the roof collapsed so that all that eventually remained were the church walls. Apart from some carpet, a small harmonium, and several altar clothes and furniture were saved from the fire, all other chattels including the original pipe organ were lost to the fire.

Since the church was fully insured, the restoration work took only a year to complete. During the restoration, several changes have been made to the building of the church.

- The roof was lowered (perhaps by considering the effective fire hydrant coverage at the time, the angle of the ridge was widened therefore the height of the building was lowered from 18 meters to 15 meters).
- Clerestory windows changed from 3 lance windows per section to 1 rose window per section.
- East – West axis extended, so the cruciform pathway was changed from Greek style to Latin style.
- A Gate and Porch was added to the eastern façade
- A new pipe organ was ordered from R. Spurden. Rutt & Co., the new organ was installed in 1937.

It is believed that the British left Tianjin in 1952, the church may have been deconsecrated in the same year. In 1958, the united worshipping of the Tianjin Methodist community used All Saints Church to practice faith, soon after the Church was converted to a small radiogram factory. From 1980-2000s, various temporary residence and administrative buildings were added to the church compound. In 2007 the compound has been cleared of these added structures to welcome the coming up Beijing Olympics. A major roof reparation was completed in 2009. A brick fence of 1936's style was restored in 2018, and since then, major restoration works of the garden and the interior of both the former church building and its annex building have been carried out. The former All Saints Church will function as an art centre once the restoration is complete.

The National Park of Mount Panshan is located in Jizhou District, 135km to the North of Tianjin. It is known as "the first mountain to the east of Beijing" and was once ranked as one of the fifteen famous scenic spots in China. The beautiful scenery of the mountain is characterized by its five peaks, eight special rocks and pine tree forest views. Emperor Qianlong of the Qing dynasty, frequently visited this place and he once said: "Had I known Mount Panshan earlier, I would not have taken the trouble to travel down to the south!" In recent years, a number of ancient buildings have been restored and a passenger cableway has been added, to encourage tourism.

Running and cycling

本页与下一页的信息各占一页

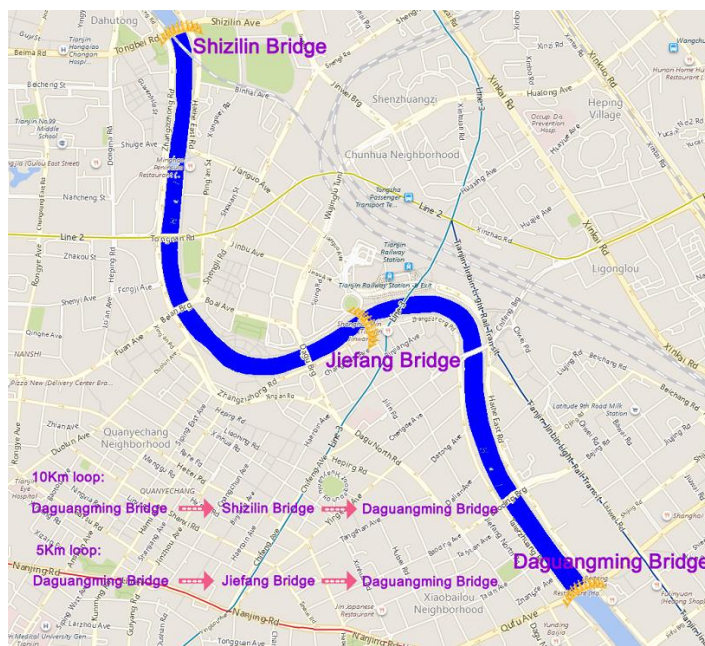

Running

There are several areas to run in Tianjin, depending on where you live. Some people enjoy running around the Water Park while others make use of the 400m track at Minyuan Stadium.

One of the nicest routes however, is along the Haihe river. The promenade along the river is exclusively for pedestrians and provides magnificent views across the city skyline. You can start the running route anywhere along the river and run up or down along one side and cross to the other side on one of the multiple bridges.

A classic 10km loop is starting at the Daguangming bridge (the golden bridge near the Astor Hotel), running north along one of the river sides until you reach Shizilin bridge. That's the bridge at the north end of the Ancient Cultural Street, from where you catch a great view on the Tianjin Eye further up the river. Run back along the other side of the Haihe until you reach Daguangming bridge again and your 10km loop is complete.

If you prefer a 5km loop from the same starting point (in front of the Astor Hotel), then cross and turn around at the famous Jiefang bridge at the Tianjin Railway Station. Generally speaking, 0 crossing and turning around at the next bridge will add about 2km to the loop.

Cycling

There is a small expat cycling group of 5 to 10 cyclists going out for rides generally either on Saturdays or Sundays early morning. The group picks up members along the way as they make their way south towards the Tuanbowa reservoir.

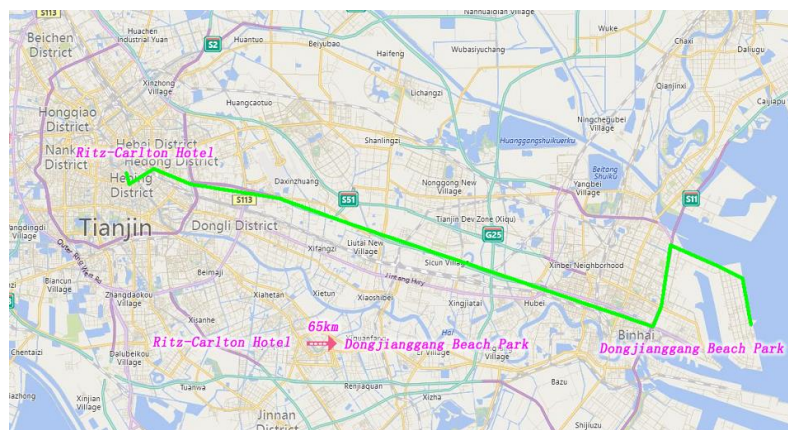

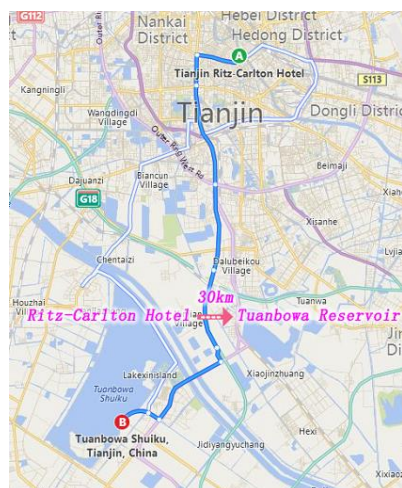

Cycling to the reservoir from the centre of town (Ritz-Carlton Hotel) is about 30km. Riding around the reservoir is highly recommended as it is a fairly scenic route along the natural waterfront. One reservoir loop is around 33km. From the Ritz-Carlton Hotel to and around the reservoir and back makes for a nice 85km morning ride.

Sometimes the cycling group rides all the way to Binhai and back. While the ride there is not the most scenic, it is still rewarding to reach the ocean. One way is about 65-70km.

There is a very helpful cycling shop at Dazhigu 6th Road (near the Wanda Vista Hotel). The mechanics can help with any bike tuning and bike maintenance issues. They are extremely friendly and also have a strong group of Chinese cyclists you can join for rides.
